

HORRIBLE AFFAIR.

Angie Burned to Death.
August 4.—Last Monday a negro woman, Angie, who had been waiting a long station, on the Pullman rails to sleep near her work. While she was discovered by three white men, who had come to the station to have some fun as they afterward learned. They took her by the hair and the contents of a bottle of turpentine, which they poured over her clothes and set her on fire. She was screaming and shrieking, and finding himself enveloped in a thick smoke, she began to shriek for help, and before long the fire had become so intense that she died in less than half an hour. Negroes in the neighborhood learned of the fact and immediately had warrants issued for the perpetrators. The police were alarmed, but the negroes in the neighborhood were so full of becoming enraged threatened other negroes that they were unable to make every effort for the capture of the persons who had burned this city. Sheriff Locke came here with the assistance of the police to arrest them.

Mrs ELIZA CHAFF was fearfully mangled by her dress caught by two revolving shafts in the laundry room at the residence of Mrs. J. P. Smith, last week.

The accident occurred while she was standing near the shafts which were rotating at the rate of about 600 revolutions per minute. Her dress was only six inches and a half from the machinery and she was killed before she had time to get away.

Her death was instantaneous. She fell through the narrow space about three feet wide between the shafts and burst into flames. Her limbs were torn apart and her body was so badly crushed, that no further aid could be given her.

She was lying face down under the shafts and her arms were twisted around them like the necks of broken bottles. She was alive the next morning.
